TRIBUNAL HEARS RIGGS BANK PLEA

Justice Siddons Takes Matter
Under Advisement After Stormy Session.

HOGAN PASSES THE LIE

Rebukes Archer for Casting Aspersions on Counsel—Early Trial of Officials Urged.

Following one of the stormiest hearings ever held in the District Supreme Court Justice Siddons last night took under advisement the motion of counsel for the three indicted officials of the Riggs National Bank that they be given an early trial.

The principal argument offered in support of the motion was that the pendency of the indictment may be taken by Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams as grounds for refusing to renew the charter of the bank when it expires July 1. The counsel for the defendants argued also that there had been undue delay in granting them a bill of particulars so that they might prepare their answers.

The argument on the motion was featured by several exchanges of personalities between counsel. Attorney Frank J. Hogan at one stage of the hearing denounced as "an absolute and baseless lie" the charge uttered by Assistant District Attorney Archer that a newspaper campaign had been carried on in an effort to show that the affidavit which resulted in the indictment of the three bank officials for perjury had been sworn to by accident.

Mr. Hogan warned the assistant district attorney that he should be careful to keep within the record and not to cast aspersions upon the character of the counsel on the other side.

In turn, Assistant District Attorney Archer expressed regret that the usage of the court did not permit him to resent what he characterized as Mr. Hogan's "Billingsgate" in the usual way. Other sharp and bitter exchanges followed in the course of the three hours' argument. The hearing brought out new information as to the reasons which had moved the defendants to object to Chief Justice Covington as trial judge for the case.

"For reasons which made it seem proper and the absolute duty of the defendants and their counsel to object to the Chief Justice," said Attorney William G. Johnson, who closed the argument for the defendants, "we took exception to the appointment of Mr. Hogan as counsel for the district attorneys. Not a line in our motion or a word in our letters referred to this phase of the question. We sought to follow the way that seemed courteous and proper to bring about the removal of the judge, and we appealed to the district attorney to select a court in which a justice agreeable to all parties would preside."

"Our reasons were good ones because the Chief Justice hearkened to them and refused to sit in the case, and the district attorney flatly refused to arrange the trial before any other justice, and eventually assurance was given that the case will be assigned before some other justice."

The issue between the opposing counsel as to the delay in the trial of the case, which has been fixed for May 8, was a sharp one. Assistant District Attorney Archer declared that other cases of importance already had been shelved to expedite the trial of the Riggs case, and he denied that any justice attached to the plea that the trial be moved up from May 8. He denied that eight months or even two years would be an unreasonable or unusual period to defer the trial of a case when the accused is at liberty on bail.

District Attorney Laskey pointed out that the Riggs case is not the only one in which instant requests for trial are being made. The counsel argued over the government's assertion that the importunities of the Riggs counsel dated only from February 6, and that at no time previous to that date had an effort been made to have an early date fixed for the trial. Attorney Hoover declared that as soon as the indictments were drawn the defendants' counsel had made inquiries as to the date for the trial and that these inquiries had been renewed January 3. He said that a specific statement of the wish of the defendants to have an early trial was made in a conference of their counsel with the district attorney on January 6.

MAIL ROUTE WILL BE RUN TO LEONARDTOWN

Starting April 17, Daily Auto Service
Will Be Operated to Town Fifty-four Miles Distant.

The Post Office Department's first experiment in extending the local delivery zone of large post offices fifty miles out into surrounding country will be fully tested here beginning April 17. Upon that date two automobile rural delivery routes operating to and from Washington and Leonardtown, Md., a distance of fifty-four miles, will go into operation.

The plan involves using two carriers to cover one route. The one carrier will leave Washington at 8 a. m. and reach Leonardtown about noon. The returning carrier will leave Leonardtown the same day at 3 p. m. and reach Washington about 8 p. m. minus each carrier will make a one-way trip each day.

The effect is to give a fast incoming service for general mail and perishable parcel post daily over a good road through a rich truck growing country, and to furnish much improved facilities for the receipt of general mail from Washington by patrons of the route. Parcel post going both ways will take the local instead of the first-zone rate.

Upon parcels weighing one and two pounds there will be no change, as the local and the first-zone rates are identical upon these weights. But the three-pound parcel will be handled for 1 cent less, the five-pound parcel for 2 cents less, the seven-pound parcel for 3 cents less, the ten-pound parcel for 4 cents less, and so on up to the fifty-pound parcel, which will be handled for 24 cents less.

EARLY ENTRY URGED IN DIAMOND PUZZLE RACE

Safest Plan Is to Enroll in Fascinating
Competition at Once, Says
Contest Manager.

While there is, and will be for several weeks, plenty of time to enter The Washington Herald's diamond puzzle contest, the safest plan is to begin the counting process now, and later, if you find you can improve upon your solution, you can register a revised one and reestablish your chance of winning. The full page announcement of the contest in the theatrical and society section of today's issue will tell you how to become a competitor for either the big $500 cash capital prize or one of the smaller, but by no means insignificant prizes.

In answer to several inquiries about the diamonds in the corners of the chart, contestants are informed that they are to be counted the same as those in the central figure. Contestants are also informed that the second puzzle will not be issued unless there are ties, and then not until after the close of the main contest on May 3. Every present subscriber is eligible to enter upon a further extension of his subscription and also any one who wishes to become a subscriber, but no solution which is not accompanied by a remittance to be applied on subscription will be registered.

The same variation in the answers which was noted in the beginning continues as the solutions multiply. This emphasizes the importance of checking up first results to determine if later effort will not yield a more satisfactory figure. The variations in the solutions so far registered show 175 as the lowest and 135,000 as the highest number counted. This gap presents ample opportunity to reach a "happy medium." Why not see if you can strike it?
